

Mr. Grist's death was one of those things that you expect but don't ever quite get ready for. I guess you might say I have rather mixed emotions about it. Sorrow, in that Mrs. Grist lost her life-time mate and you lost your lifetime friend. On the other hand, from Mr. Grist's standpoint death had to be a relief in a way. Even though he may not have suffered too much, he would have, had he lived longer. The scripture that comes to my mind is to the effect that "the Lord never gives one of His more than they can stand."
